

More government bureaucracy?

No.

We need lasting solutions for our economy.

Congressman Forbes has a plan for a better way forward.

Ensuring oversight of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. Supported legislation to ensure more oversight and accountability of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, created under the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform Act (HR 1315).

Providing regulatory relief for community banks. Supported updating the federal securities laws to ensure that smaller community banks are not required to register with the SEC and comply with burdensome reporting requirements by raising the bank shareholder threshold for SEC registration from 500 to 2,000 (HR 1965).

Advocating fair appeals process for financial institutions. Cosponsored legislation to provide financial institutions with a fair and impartial process to appeal examination reports for federal financial regulators and providing further clarity to regulators (HR 3461).

Increasing access to capital for small businesses. Supported legislation to extend key programs increasing access to capital and continuing tax incentives to allow small businesses to grow, expand, and create jobs.

Protecting homeowners from predatory mortgage lending. Supported efforts to help homeowners who are at risk of losing their homes, while also protecting homebuyers from predatory lending practices in order to prevent future problems.

Increasing regulatory accountability. Supported modifying the rule-making process by requiring federal agencies to consider alternatives and the potential costs and benefits prior to issuing new rules and regulations (HR 3010).
